

4 months later...

- Father files an emergency motion requesting intervention by the court
- He states that the assessment remains incomplete because Mother refuses to support a supervised conjoint meeting between the evaluator, Tiffany and Father. Michelle attended a session but refused to enter the evaluator's office.
- He alleges that he has not seen Tiffany in 2 months because she is crying and clinging to her mother at the time of parenting transitions; the visit monitor has tried to pick up Tiffany without Father and has encountered similar problems. He alleges that Mother refuses to support visitation exchanges at a neutral site. He states that Tiffany is acting more upset and like a much younger child than his nephew of the same age
- Jeremy is resisting transitions from his mother's home and sometimes does not appear at activities or has been picked up early from school when parenting time with Father is planned. Father states that Jeremy is now repeating angry statements characteristic of his mother. When he appears at an activity and does appear to respond to father's greeting or wave, Mary or even Michelle often ushers him away.
- Father has received a call from the school, stating that Jeremy is not completing homework and has begun to have fights with other children. The school is requesting that he be evaluated for ADHD and possible medication. Jeremy has also gained substantial weight and is being teased
- Father did pay for Michelle's violin lessons and denies that he has interfered with her ability to practice. Mary states that Michelle has a violin recital in six weeks and "wants a break" from visiting with Father so that she is less distracted. She also states that Michelle doesn't want Father to attend the violin recital. Father states that there is no reason that he should be barred from the violin recital and sees no reason that he should be monitored to do it.
- Mother responds that the children say they are afraid of time with their father and that obviously the monitor is biased against her because she is insisting on Father's parenting time and asking Mother to set limits with the children
- She states that Jeremy is too upset to do his homework and is overeating because he is upset.
- She believes the evaluator should move forward with the conjoint interview when each of the children is comfortable
- Father continues to request preschool for Tiffany and Mother continues to oppose it
- Father requests a medical for Jeremy, including an assessment of Jeremy's weight, and that Jeremy be required to rejoin team soccer if he is found to be overweight

- Father requests all parenting transitions at a neutral site and that he also be allowed to participate at Tiffany's preschool, in all interventions for Jeremy's weight, and in Michelle's violin recitals
- Mother requests status quo until the assessment is completed
